

I feel that currently the FCC and other governing bodies do not have enough information regarding the effects of transmitting RF over unshielded electric transmission cables and the resultant effect on conventional (i.e. amateur band) radio communications. The radios used in amateur radio are sensitive enough that signals from the power lines can radiate and be received by those receivers used in amateur radio.